LOCAL HISTORY.

Court Houses and Places of Records.

Incidental Memorandum—By Leonard B. Chapman. Number 80.

At the October term of court, 1776, a committee was appointed to settle with Stephen Longfellow, Esq., "his whole account for building the court house as far as completed before the destruction made by a cruel enemy."

The "cruel enemy" was Mowatt who had command of the British naval forces who bombarded and burned all the business and part of the residential portion of Portland, Oct. 18, 1775, on account of personal insults bestowed upon him. As I have stated, the old court house made from the first meeting house which had been moved along the street to a point westerly and fitted up for a town house, as well as the new house, which was the pride of the town, fell from heated cannon balls and the use of lighted torches in the hands of marines who landed from the vessels to burn what the cannon balls had not demolished. Much has been written and printed in denunciation of the British for what then transpired, but it is some of the citizens of the town, aided by intruders from the Town of Brunswick, had not indulged in lawlessness. Mowatt would not have arrayed his squadron in line of battle and engaged in wholesale destruction as he did.

At the time the court house was built, it was destroyed by Mowatt, an effort was made to move the timber fort or jail down Middle street and add it to the court house but the attempt was not a success.

When a committee was authorized, after the war of the Revolution, to look for a site for a court house it reported in favor of the timber fort lot as the county owned the premises, but upon a further consideration the lot now occupied by City Hall, opposite the head of Exchange street, was selected and the wooden building constructed, referred to in article No. 76, October 6, after which the First Congregational meeting house of the Bethel West parish was modeled. The frame was raised Oct. 3, 1785—see entry as follows:

"Oct. 21. For two days and two nights it rained without ceasing, as hard as ever known, which raised the freshets in such a hideous manner as to carry away all the bridges on the Presumpscot river, and many elsewhere and also many mills. Saco bridges carried away."

This was the date the great havoc was done among the first settlers of Bethel by a rapid rise in the Androscoggin—a record every Bethel citizen should preserve.

A DELAYED HUNTING TRIP.

Port Gordon was arraigned in Court Monday morning before Judge Stearns on a charge of keeping with intent to sell Gordon occupies the A. L. Stanwood farm in Peru and on Saturday, Deputy Sheriff Small visited the place and while searching the barn, found five gallons of whiskey in pint bottles, stored in suit cases and hidden under the hay and around in various cracks and places of concealment. Mr. Gordon claimed that he and two other men were just going hunting and were taking this along, probably to call the deer to them, instead of being forced to tramp through the bushes after them, according to the old fashioned way. Nevertheless, the Judge deemed it was according to the court record of Carleton, who has twice before served time, to sentence him to sixty days in jail and $100 and costs; in case of nonpayment of fine, sixty days additional. Gordon took the whole jail sentence, which means four months. Small took him to St. Paul on Monday afternoon.

FIRE AT WEST BUCKFIELD.

The fine set of farm buildings owned by Victor Pearson, of West Buckfield, was destroyed by fire October 28th. Five horses and eleven cows were destroyed also. The farming family and most of the furniture were in the lower part of the house when the fire started at the end of the barn. The buildings were insured for $12,000.

DEATH OF PROMINENT CARTHAGE CITIZEN.

One of Oldest Citizens of Franklin County.

Mr. Wyman V. Tainter, a highly respected citizen, passed away Tuesday Oct. 25, aged 83 years, 10 months. The funeral service was held at his late home, Thursday, Oct. 27, Rev. Mr. Neevine of North Jay officiating. The funeral was largely attended, many members of Mystic Valley Grange of which Mr. Tainter was a member, were in attendance, also members of other granges. The remains were tenderly borne to the Tainter cemetery by his nephews, W. H. Tainter of Lewiston, Frank and Fred Tainter of Auburn, and Abel Tainter of Weld. The floral offerings were many and beautiful. In the death of Mr. Tainter, Carthage loses one of its best and oldest citizens, and one whom will be greatly missed. Politically he had always been a Republican. He was a delegate at the memorial convention at Strong when the Republican party was organized, and had attended every County Convention as a delegate excepting two, since that time.

He was a successful and progressive farmer, owning one of the best farms in town, on which is an excellent orchard, comprising several hundred trees, all being set out and cared for by him, and from which he gathered yearly from three to five hundred barrels of choice fruit. Several years ago he built a barn in which machinery was installed for making barrels. Since that time he had manufactured his own barrels and many for his neighbors. He was always interested in town affairs and held many important offices, as town treasurer, selectman, school committee and tax collector. He was a kind neighbor, an affectionate husband and father. He leaves a widow and one son, who reside at "Wildwood" their beautiful home.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Maine loses one congressman at least under the new apportionment according to the census. She began her career as a State in 1820 with eight full fledged congressmen and also held this number until 1840 when by the reapportionment she lost one. In 1853 she lost still another, making the number of congressmen six. In 1858, the first year James G. Blaine went to Congress she had five, and in 1883 she lost another representative, reducing the number to four, which it has since been.

While not a great amount of activity is in evidence about the exterior of the new State House the interior is a very busy place, and while a lot of work remains to be done before the building is finished, the men are doing it, and everything is going along well. The carpenters are busy with the floors and other woodwork and the painters are also working in various parts of the building. The first coat of priming has been put on in the rooms and the work of painting the Senate chamber and Representatives hall was commenced yesterday. Men are also engaged in putting in the new toilets. It is now stated that the building will be completed the first of December. Bids have already been advertised for furnishing the carpeting and window shades for the building and will be opened at the council chamber in the State house at 10 o'clock Friday afternoon.

The plan of the New England railroads to substitute two days instead of four days as the time allowed shippers to retain freight cars before demurrage charges begin, was again deferred Thursday by the Interstate Commerce Commission, suspending the operation of the new move until Dec. 1. This, however, probably will be only a temporary postponement as the commission and the National Railway Commission or the Organization favor standardization of the demurrage time to two days. The roads affected are the Boston & Maine, Bangor & Aroostook, Boston & Albany, Central Vermont, Grand Trunk, Maine Central, New York, New Haven & Hartford, and Railroad Railroads. Through out most of the country the system in vogue is to charge shippers a dollar a day for cars kept loaded after two days following arrival. The New England shippers have been both to give up their four-day privilege. The commission suspended announced Thursday was due to lack of time to complete the investigation of the matter begun in Bethel Oct. 17.

HALLOWEEN FESTIVITIES AT RUMFORD.

The vestry of the Universalist church was the scene of ghosts and witches on Monday night. The walls were decorated with black cats, witches and all sorts of emblems of Halloween. Ghosts were in evidence throughout the room. The first thing was a story told by Mrs. McKean during which the ghosts came into the room and took their place on the platform and groaned through out the telling of direful things which happened to a poor old woman that lived all alone.

Around the room were various stunts to do, such as shooting apples with a bow and arrow that were in a tub of water, and getting fortunes out of a sandst pie. These two stunts were presided over by Miss Margarette McKean and Miss Ina Fogg. Another interesting fortune arrangement was carried out by Miss Norma Gates on the platform. A lot of strings of many colors were tied, from which hung fortunes in envelopes with fantastic pictures of cats, pumpkins, etc. Perhaps one of the best attended of all the many fortune stunts was the "Devil's Den" or Witches Cave, presided over by Miss Louise Martin, dressed as a witch, where she told fortunes by the light of a candle with cards. This was held in a tiny room just off from the main room and was completely hung with sheets and a canopy was built over the head of the witch on which were all sorts of witch emblems. The room was thronged during the entire evening and questions of great importance were decided and the future revealed.

After the games had been enjoyed for a time the party was invited upstairs, where the refreshment committee had prepared a most dainty repast. A large table was laid in the center of the room directly under the chandelier from which were streamers of orange and black paper. The table was lighted wholly by candles and Jack-o'-lanterns. Mrs. Barber and Mrs. McKean served coffee, Miss Sade Virgin, Mrs. Chas. Brown, and Mrs. Swimer served cake, nuts, apples, preserved pumpkins and crackers. The cake contained the ring, thimble, button, money and wish bone. Miss Gates got the ring, and those getting the other things were so quiet about them that their names are not known. The party broke up with the feeling that a good time had been enjoyed by all.

HALLOWEEN PARTY AT HOLDEN HALL.

Holden Hall was the scene of a very happy gathering, Monday evening, the occasion being a Halloween party given by the teachers of the Academy to the students.

The following invitations were issued:

"There's a day that is called Halloween, And on that evening I mean If you'll come to the 'Hall', In your finest clothes all, You then will find out what we mean."

Oct. 25, 8:30 to 10:30.

The guests were received by three waiters in ghostly attire, and at 8:45 a grand march was formed in the large dining room, at the close of which prizes were awarded for the best costumes. The prizes were awarded to Wilfred Foster, who represented a society girl in evening costume, and Miss Gladys Russell, a charming x-ray maid.

HALLOWEEN SUPPER AT BETHEL.

The Christian Endeavor served a Halloween supper at Garland Chapel, Monday evening.

Jack-o'-lanterns smiled on you from all conceivable places and the dim light with the "witch" in attendance at the "money" table, together with the subdued music played by the pianist in costume, gave a weird appearance to the room and one could easily recall all the tales of witchery connected with the Halloween.

When supper was announced the dining room with its lights and cheer, gave one an appetite for the fine supper, although even here the smiling lanterns, unique fruit dishes and even the table decorations were pleasant reminders, as well as the string of "black cats" ingeniously strung up by the tables.

All enjoyed a merry time and much credit is due the committee who had the affair in charge and the older ones were as merry as the younger ones who served most gracefully.

EQUINE INTELLIGENCE.

By Cora R. Speeder.

Hester stood back and eyed the horse dubiously. He was a shaggy, nervous creature all a-quiver with vitality from his last small hoof to the star on his forehead.

"He's got a Roman nose, and I don't like his eyes," she said. She thought regretfully of old Bob, who just one week before had dropped dead in the stall from sheer old age and the weariness of living, in consequence where of she must have some kind of a horse. Hester believed she could drive any horse living. And this one was so handsome—and so cheap.

"Now, you can't judge a horse's disposition by his eye or nose or more; you can the handle of an egg by the outside," convincingly spoke the sharp-eyed man who had brought the animal to Hester's door and was showing him off with intent to sell. "This here feller's kind as a kitten. Why, my wife always drove him. He's apt to get up a little when he's stood in a creek or so the way he was now 'count' of weather, but when it comes to real horse manners—why, say, you couldn't kick him into doing anything wrong."

"And you say you've owned him a good while?"

"Hated him from a veal, ma'am. Ask any of my neighbors—they'll tell you. My wife felt like death to see him go, and I left every one of the young ones a-quiver. Regular get with 'em all, you know. Ho, there Jess! Stand still, can't you! You're how 'tis with him, ma'am. He's young and full of life, but there's a little something in his head."

Why, say, if I wasn't hard up like I told you, and hadn't to sell, I wouldn't take $250 for the horse, and just see what I'm offering him to you for."

"The price is reasonable," Hester said. She was considering. It was a serious thing for a woman to buy a horse from a man, especially such a horse as this Jess from such an individual as his owner, who, moreover, talked from the unvarying region known throughout the countryside as Jess's Block. But horses were scarce and dear, and if she ever got to town again she must have one of her own. Besides this, Jess appealed to the eye. After having driven poky old Bob so long her fingers itched to draw the reins over this spirited animal. She dashed with sudden resolution.

"Put him into the barn," she said, and came back to the house for year check."

The man led the horse away and Hester entered the house. It was a small gray house under a tangle of whitish vines. Hester had lived in it alone since her father died and she expected always to go on living alone in it. It was hard for a woman to run a farm alone, even a small one such as this was. This year she had let the planting on shares and had a neighbor's boy come during the day and do such shares as she had.

She sat at a great old secretary in the living room when the man came in. She had written the check with a firm hand, though rather appalled at the small sum it left in the bank. And only midsummer with nothing more coming until the harvest. She signed as she handed the check to the man, who took it and made a speedy departure. It occurred to her that he would lose no time in presenting it at the Sharon bank.

"Well," she thought, philosophically, "he has my money and I have his horse. I guess I'll have an early breakfast and drive to town this afternoon."

STANLEY JACKSON, PRISONER AT PARIS JAIL ESCAPED.

Wednesday afternoon, at eight prisoners at the jail were shoveling gravel at the rear of the jail, in charge of Ray Cole, one of the eight, D. Stanley Jackson, escaped, while Mr. Cole was absent for a moment in one of the buildings.

Jackson was seen later in the woods near the Rumford road, about a mile west of the jail. He wore a striped suit at that time. At the recent trial of court, Jackson received consecutive sentences of ninety and thirty days in two liquor cases.

Tommy, the boy of all work, was surprised to hear the bell summoning him from Hester's little garden, where he was laboriously weeding, and he was still more surprised to find Jackson spread, though it was only 11:30.

"You can hitch up the new horse as soon as you have eaten," Hester said. "I am going to town."

As she stood before the glass in her room dressing while Tommy harnessed the remembered with a thrill of childish vanity that her way lay past John Lane's house and that he would be sure to see her driving the new horse. Hester was still very young about some things, even though it had been fully 15 years since she and John Lane were lovers.

A quarrel had spoiled their love affair just as it was about to culminate in an engagement. John owned a horse which Hester's father had greatly wished to buy, but at a price of his own, which happened to be one John would not sell at. Hester was as anxious as her father was to have the horse, for she loved to drive, and it seemed to her that John had set his price too high. He also had tried to act as go-between, hoping that for her sake John would give in. But there was a strain of quiet stubbornness in John's nature with which she had never become acquainted. He would not sell save according to his liking, and her father persisted in trying to buy according to his. Family spring up between the young man and the old. In the end Hester was drawn into what became actual disagreements, she quarreled with John very badly, very foolishly. Since then they had not spoken. They lived in apparent ignorance each of the other. Yet neither had married. And each had several flatterer chances. Every time Hester went to town she had to pass through John's beautiful farm, and the sight of it always made her heart sink with regret. She had never lived down her girl's love affair. Her anger had been too deep, but John's, being of slower growth, had taken deeper root. She had long since forgiven him, but she felt that he had not forgiven her and never would.

There was a creaking of wheels

HEART THRILLING GEMS.

The Answer.
He sat on my knee at evening,
The boy who is "half past three,"
And the clear blue eyes from his sun browned face
Smiled happily to me.
I held him close as the twilight fell
And called him "my dear little son." Then I said: "I have wondered for many days
Where it is that my baby's gone.

"I'd a baby once in a long white gown Whom I rocked just as I do you;
His hair was soft as yellow silk,
And his eyes were like violets blue;
His little hands were like pink tipped flowers;
See, yours are so strong and brown.
He has slipped away and is lost, I fear;
Do you know where my baby's gone?"

Did my voice half break as the thoughts would come
Of the sweet and sacred days When motherhood's first joys were mine?

Was a shade of regret on my face?
For close round my neck crept a sturdy arm,
And the boy who is "half past three"
Said: "The baby, he went to Boy-land,
And—didn't you know? He's me!"
—Ida R. Smith in Christian Register.

"I'll Do What I Can."
Who takes for his motto, "I'll do what I can,"

Shall better the world as he goes down life's hill,
The willing young heart makes the capable man,
And who does what he can oft can do what he will.
There's strength in the impulse to help things along,
And forces undreamed of will come to the aid
Of one, who though weak, believes he is strong
And offers himself to the task unafraid.

"I'll do what I can," is a challenge to fate,
And fate most succumb when it's put to the test;
A heart that is willing to labor and wait
In its tussle with life ever comes out the best.
It puts the blue lips of depression to rest
And makes many difficult problems seem plain;
It mounts over obstacles, dispels doubt
And unravels kinks in life's curious chain.

"I'll do what I can," keeps the progress machine
In good working order as centuries roll,
And civilization would perish, I do wean,
Were those words not written on many a soul.
They fill the great forests, they furrow the soil,
They back new inventions to benefit man;
They fear no exertion, make pastime of toil,
Oh, great is earth's debt to "I'll do what I can!"
—Elia Wheeler Wilcox.

Kiss and Make It Well.
I sit at my window and sew and dream, While my little boy is at play Beguiles my thoughts from him and seam
As he frolics the livelong day;
But time and again he comes to me With a sorrowful tale to tell,
And mother must look at the scratch or bump,
Then kiss it and make it well.

So I kissed his head and his knee and his arm
And the dear little grimy hand,
And who can fathom the magic charm,
And who can understand For I even kiss when he bites his tongue,
And love works its mystic spell,
For there's never a cut nor a scratch nor a lump
That mother can kiss it well.

'Tis a foolish whim, do you say? Ah, yes!
But the foolish things of earth Have taught the wise since a little child
In Bethlehem had its birth.
And we know that cooing an afterbirth—
We know, but we do not tell—Will never be free from its bitter smart
Till kisses have made it well.

Home Companion.

AFTER SUFFERING ONE YEAR

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Milwaukee, Wis. — "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me a well woman,
and I would like to tell the whole world of it. I suffered from female trouble
and fearful pain in my back. I had the best doctors and they all decided that I had a tumor
in addition to my female trouble, and advised an operation. Lydia E.
Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman and I have no more backache. I hope I can help others by telling them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me." — Mrs. Emma Lutz, 533 First St., Milwaukee, Wis.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

If I Were You.
Edward William Dutcher.
I wouldn't think about distress,
If I were you;
I wouldn't even once confess To ever feeling blue;
But when the sun is well disposed To shine upon our friends and foes, I'd be content with even less,
If I were you.

If I were you I wouldn't care How fortune went;
Just do your best—you'll have a share Of sweet content,
If only you will have the sense
To put your trust in Providence, And take what's sent!

Just let it rain, or snow or shine;
'Twill bring no gain
To blame misfortune, or repine;
The longest lane
Will end sometime, and every day Necess will bloom along the way.
Because of rain.

Then sing your songs, cry if you must,
But keep in view
The health, and inspiring trust That's always due
To them that strive to live above All earthly things—excepting love;
I'd let all other treasures rust,
If I were you!

HARTFORD.

Varny-Berry.

A very pretty home wedding occurred at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Berry, at high noon, Oct. 23, when their only daughter, Etta Robinson, was united in marriage to George William Varny of Tarent. The ceremony was very impressive, the single ring service being used, with Rev. R. K. Berry and Adamant J. Berry, little nephew of the bride, as ring bearers. Attending the bride were the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Berry and with the groom his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Varny. Mrs. Leon Berry, a sister in law of the bride, played the wedding march.

The bride looked very sweet in a simple gown of cream tulle with silk braided net bands. She wore a wreath of orange blossoms in her hair, worn by the groom's mother at her wedding. The bridesmaids were tastefully decorated in green and white and the ceremony was performed under a beautiful wedding veil.

At the close, a wedding lunch was served, after which a reception followed from two to four and many congratulations were given the happy couple. The presents were numerous and beautiful.

They will reside with the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Varny, at Tarent. They have the best wishes of a host of friends.

Relatives have received word that the condition of Elmer Dalley, who is ill of typhoid fever at a hospital in Wisconsin, is very critical. His wife, who is at the C. M. G. hospital, Lewiston, ill of the same disease, is on the gain.

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Nash of Portland, sympathize with them in the loss of their baby daughter, who lived but two days. Mrs. Nash was Miss Katherine Bradford of Canton, before her marriage.

Miss Annie Seavey spent the Sabbath out of town.

While repairs were being made on the residence of Frank O. Proctor of Canton a few days ago, a letter was found lying on top of a window casement in the walls, which is valuable on account of its age. The letter was dated at Rumford, March 1st, 1817, and was signed "B. Lovejoy." The name of the postmaster at Rumford "Samuel Rolfe" was written on the outside of the envelope. The person's name to whom the letter was addressed could not be deciphered. The letter itself is of no special importance. The house in which this letter was found is the oldest one in Canton, having been built in 1816 by Gustavus Hayford, the father of Mrs. Eliza Barrows, Canton's oldest resident. It is situated on one of the prettiest sites in Canton village and has remained in the old fashioned manner in which it was built until recently, so repairs of any importance having been made to the knowledge of the residents of the town. Mr. Proctor has recently had a new foundation for the house and has commenced to remodel the structure. Large windows have been inserted and other improvements made. In the spring the roof will be raised and the house thoroughly renovated and the oldest landmark in Canton, which is so familiar to everyone, will be transformed into a modern structure.

Chas. P. Oldham was called to Farmington Falls, Tuesday, by the serious illness of his sister, Mrs. Sarah Bartlett, who has been ill of diabetes for two or three years, and has been failing for several weeks. His brother, Augustus Oldham, who is stopping at Farmington Falls is also in very poor health.

Frank Dodge has entered St. Mary's General Hospital, Lewiston, for treatment.

The Relief Corps entertained their families, the soldiers and G. A. R. men at dinner, Tuesday.

THE HOME CIRCLE.

Pleasant Reveries—A Column Dedicated to Tired Mothers as they Join the Home Circle at Evening Tide.

If men cared less for wealth and fame,
And less for battle field and glory;
If men, instead of nursing pride,
Would learn to hate and to abhor it;
If more relied on love to guide,
The world would be the better for it.

If men dealt less in stocks and lands,
And more in bonds and deeds fraternal;
If love's work had more willing hands,
To link the world to the eternal;
If men saved up Love's oil and wine,
And bruted human souls would pour it;
If "you" and "mine" would once combine,
The world would be the better for it.

If more would act the play of life,
And fewer spoil it in rehearsal;
If Bigotry would sheathe its knife Till good became more universal;
If custom, gray with ages grown,
Had fewer blind men to adore it;
If silent shone for truth alone,
The world would be the better for it.

If men were wise in little things, Affecting less in all their dealings;
If hearts had fewer rusted strings,
To isolate their kindly feelings; If men, when wronged, beats down the night,
Would strike together and restore it;
If light made light in every fight,
The world would be the better for it.

Tit for Tat.

The saying is a byword of ill nature and quarrelling. "Tit for tat," and "Dand enough for you!"—these were the two meaneast exclamations ever heard in the set of children among whom I grew up. Our differences were due to thoughtlessness and not to any bad intent; and those of us who quarrelled most fiercely one day were often the best of friends the next. I suppose that is just the way with children today, and always will be so long as the world lasts and men and women have to begin their lives by being boys and girls. But we should have been a great deal happier if we had never quarrelled; had never said or acted "Tit for tat." Acting it is worse than saying it. It is bad enough to be a mean or unkind thing to another person from any motive, from envy or hatred or hasty temper,—but to do it simply (as the saying is) "to pay back" for an unkind thing to us, seems to me the very meanest kind of meanness.

It occurred to me once upon a time to try to find out what the hateful phrase came from. "Tit for tat," the words sound as silly as they are ugly, and I wondered how they had ever come to be in people's mouths, like a sort of proverb. To my great surprise, I found that the saying originated with the Dutch people. In Dutch, it was "Dit voor dat," and the words mean simply, "This for that," nothing more.
Two how has the saying come to mean always the return of a disagreeable or evil action, by one of its kind? There is a proverb, "One good turn deserves another." When kindness is repaid by kindness, therefore, why should we say, "This for that," as well as when unkindness is repaid by unkindness?

Nobody can give any reason—and nobody can tell, now, how the ill-famed meaning was ever fastened to the words; but there it is, fastened and it will always stick, I suppose. Yet it would be a very little thing, if it meant a good thing. The Dutch are short and brisk-speaking, and they are based upon three cheerful vowels—ee, aa, oo, each with the strongest, sweetest sound it has. Surely, it is a shame to degrade them as when we might turn the phrase right around if we would,—inside out, and right out, at last, and we might make it mean just the opposite from what it always has meant, by never using it except when we had paid back a bad turn by a good one, an unkind turn by a loving one, a mean deed by the most generous one we could do or perform. Then would be the time to cry out "Tit for tat!" This for that, my friend! and so often as you find me badly, I'll treat you well, and so it will say ever comes to mean that it will be by the children beginning to give it that meaning.
It would take about a century, I dare say. But that is only three generations of children! Wouldn't it be worth while for the children of to-day to start the new version of the saying?
And then, sometime in the far distant future, say in the year 2000, perhaps somebody who is interested in etymol-ogy and the origin of phrases, will be seeking, as I sought, to find out where "Tit for tat" came from—Helen Jackson, in St. Nicholas.

"Help Me Across, Papa."

"There was anguish in the faces of those who bent over the little white bed, for they knew that Baby May was drifting away from them, going out alone into the dark voyage where so many have been wrestled from loving hands, and as they tried in vain to keep her, even to smooth with their kind solicitude her last brief sorrows, they had to experience in the bitter hour of parting the pangs of death.
They only hoped that she did not suffer now. The rings of golden hair lay damp and unstirred on her white forehead; the roses were turned to lilacs on her cheeks; the lovely violet eyes saw them not, but were upturned and fixed; the breath on the pale lips came and went, fluttered and seemed loath to leave its sweet prison.

Oh, the awful, cruel strength of death; the weakness, the helplessness, of love! Those who loved her better than life could not lift a hand to avert the destroyer; they could only watch and wait until the end should come.
Her merry, ringing laugh would never again gladden their hearts; her little feet would make no more music as they ran, scattering to-morrow them.
Baby May was dying, and all the house was darkened and hushed.

Then it was, as the shadows fell in deeper waves about us, that she stirred over so faintly, and our hearts gave a great bound as we thought, "She is better! she will live." Yes, she knew us; her eyes moved from one face to the other, with a dim uncertain gaze.
Oh, how good God was to give her back! How we could praise and bless him all our lives. She lifted one dainty hand—cold—almost pulseless, but better—we would have it so—and laid it on the rough browned hand of the rugged man who sat nearest to her.
His eyes lighted all his bronzed face like a rainbow as he felt the gentle pressure of his little daughter's hand, —the mute, imploring touch that meant a question. Her gentle heart was quick to respond.

"What is it, darling?" he asked, in broken tones of joy and thanksgiving.
She could not speak, and so we raised her on the pretty lace pillow, and her two white face shone in the twilight like a fair star or a sweet woodland flower.

She lifted her eyes to his—eyes that even then had the glory and the promise of immortality in them, and reaching out her little wasted arm, said, in her weary, flute-like voice:
"Help me across, papa!"

Then she was gone! We held to our breaking hearts the frail, beautiful shell, but she was far away, whither we dare not follow. She had crossed the dark river, and not alone.

"Over the river the boatman pale Carried another, the household pet; She crossed on her bosom her dimpled hands,

And fearlessly entered the phantom bark;

We felt it glide from the silver sands,
And all our sunshine grew strangely dark."

On infinite Father! When we weary, disappointed ones reach our pleading hands to Thee, wilt Thou take us even as the little child, and help us across the mountains of defeat and the valleys of humiliation into the still waters, in the city of the New Jerusalem, whose builder and maker is God!

Robbie had longed earnestly for a baby brother and a pair of white rabbits. The answer to both wishes came on the same morning, but was not quite satisfactory for there were two baby brothers and only one rabbit. Robbie was greatly disgusted at the mistake. The next day his father found the following notice tacked to the gate-post: "For all one nice fat baby or I will swap him for a white rabbit."

Have "Good Luck"
Each Baking Day

For "luck" lies mostly in the flour. The wise cook uses William Tell and knows her bread will be perfection—her cake a marvel of delicate lightness—her pastry tender and flaky.

William Tell Flour is made from Ohio Red Winter Wheat—which has no equal. There is only a limited supply—enough to go around among the housewives who have learned the value of perfect flour.

LOCAL HISTORY.

A picture of the 1785 court house was made while it stood, copies of which are to be had. They show the appearance of the first Bethel meeting house, though it is claimed by those who remembered the Bethel house that it had more windows than the picture shows.
For a period of several years the old timber jail was used in connection with the new court house, or till 1793 when the court house lot was enlarged and a cut stone jail erected in 1797 which was 34x50 feet on the ground and two stories high, with a gambrel roof.
There was then a house between the jail and Back Cove. It stood, an inhuman receptacle for the unfortunate, till 1859, when the present jail was built.

Between the court house and jail there was a small building which was the school house, and two stories high which was in 1799. The poor debtor's rooms were in the attic that did not require so many bars and bolts to keep in safety the incarcerated.
The manuscript records, or reports of committees of investigation of jail conditions at that period are seeking to behold at this time.

In 1816 the old wooden court house gave way to one of pleasing architectural design constructed of brick; columns; balustrade on the roof; cupola, surmounted by a pinnacle at the top of which were a pair of gold gilded balloons. I understand they may be seen in the Portland Natural History Society rooms on Elm street.

In 1831 a projecting wing was added to each end, supposed at the date of erection to be fire-proof, projecting also towards the street. The projecting ends, or additions, were finished to correspond with the front projection which gave the structure an imposing appearance considering the date of the erection. Engravings of the building are in existence.

IN SEVERAL PARTS—PART TEN.

Admiral Henry Mowat, the commander of the five vessels of war of the British navy that with heated shot and lighted torch, destroyed, October 18, 1775, the part of Falmouth now known as Portland which contained the Cumberland county court house nearly ready for occupancy to which attention has been made, died on board his majesty's ship named Asistance in Chesapeake Bay from apoplexy, and his remains were interred in the church yard of the Episcopal church at Hampton, Virginia. The head stone marking the spot was photographed some few years since, by an officer of the U. S. Navy, of which the Maine Historical Society possesses a copy. The inscription declares the stone to be "erected to the memory of Henry Mowat, Esq. late Captain of His Majesty's ship the Assistance who having served his country with zeal and fidelity forty four years, died on the 18th day of April, 1776, aged 63 years. Universally lamented." The church's edifice was erected in 1732 and the stone may be seen standing some twenty feet from the front door with the legend somewhat effaced by the hand of Time. The common way of spelling the name at this time is with a double letter t. To intensify the sufferings, in part, the General Court set apart a township that is now known by the name of New Portland and is located twenty miles north-northwest of Canaan. It was immediately incorporated by some of those who had been made homeless by the orders of Monroville, but was not incorporated as a town till March 25th, 1806.

The lower story of the wooden structure erected at the head of Exchange street in Portland for a court house built was not used wholly for the storage of the galleons, stocks and other implements of punishment then in use.

In 1804 a permit was granted by the Court of Sessions to use some part of the building for a Law Library, and the collection then made was the nucleus of the present great repository of law books, and notwithstanding the Trustees of the Walker estate have donated ten thousand dollars to enlarging its number of volumes, and the Commissioners of the State have recently donated dollars and twice this amount for a library towards its maintenance.

No member of the Cumberland bar is allowed to consult a book till he has paid the Bar Association of lawyers the stipend of three dollars or become a humble suppliant for temporary admission, who then receives a permit from a member of the association to enter, good only for the time being.
This same rule, or "prohibition," applies to every taxpayer of Cumberland county.

At this date the Court of Sessions "Ordered that 12 1/2 cents per week be collected of all poor debtors confined in the county jail for room rent."

The sheriff paid the bills for the raw material used in housing the prisoners and put the profit in the sheriff's own pocket.

It was also "Ordered" by the court the same year that "Drummers and singers of Portland be allowed to use the lower room for the practice of music."

In 1808 the court agreed to allow the Portland artillery and light infantry to use the lower floor as "a place of practice and exercise for discipline and instructions in martial movements."

In 1815 plans for a "fire-proof brick court house with cellar were presented the court which were adopted, and $15,000 ordered to be raised, of which $5,000 Portland's part was figured at $5,000. The plans however cannot be found nor anything more excepting the size of the structure which has been given in the Citizen.

In 1817 the old wooden court house after which the Bethel West Parish fashioned its church edifice was sold for "five hundred dollars to John Powell and from others," moved off and changed inside according to the action of a committee of Free Will Deputies of which it is conjectured John Powell was one and a leader.
Later the adherents built the "Bear trap" edifice, upon the south easterly corner of Canal and Cumberland streets with beffy, clock and tall steeple which served as a landmark for no other good—that told the public the time of day. Its doors were open for the discussion of every popular question of the time. The Rev. William Miller, the founder of the Adventist dogma, who prophesied the coming of Christ to the world, preached here the doctrines of the "sacred charity," exciting some to tears—others to ridicule during his sojourn here, about, but a careful examination of the local papers concerning the "Adventist Mirror," fails to bring to light a single allusion of the teachings of the singular man, though the Eastern Argus noticed in a half-column article his death.
The Portland Manual Training school building occupies the site of the Free Will Baptist house that succeeded the old court house as a place of worship.

It is a matter of record that NEW OLOOMBITHE.

A century ago was a half-city town with Portland.

A sketch of the town's history is recorded which I will here copy in full.
In 1775, the old fort was sold for some hundreds of acres. New Oloombithe became a half-city town with Portland in 1775, continuing so till the organization of Oxford county in 1805, when the records were removed to school house, now (1880) the tin shop of Mr. Philip C. Collier. The jury-rooms were in the old Bell tavern, kept by Peleg Chandler, on the opposite corner, since 1782. The old sign is still kept in the village, but there is no hotel in the town. A whippingpost was erected beside the cattle pound near by, and stocks were made, in which some of the community usually spent their Sundays.

The foregoing makes it appear that there was a regularly organized court of judicature with manuscript record books and implements of torture for those receiving court condemnation for man and beast, but this is not wholly true.

The records show there was a term of the court of Common Pleas held there in the month of January 1793, and another in 1794, of short duration.
From this point of observation with respect to the distance New Gloucester was from Portland and its wild surroundings it partook of sacrilege to go there for court hearings and law enforcement. They made implements of torture but did not erect a court building or jail, and when the clerk left the town for his home he took his record book with him which was really "the court," now in existence.

In the year of 1799 the Court of Sessions of the Peace held a court there in the month of January composed of fifteen Judges, or fifteen Justices of the Peace.

At a term of this court held in 1803 a committee was chosen to take into consideration the expediency of building a court house and jail, and at the February term of 1804, the committee gave to the court an opinion that it was not expedient to build a jail but a court house was necessary; then the committee was instructed to report the kind of a building necessary and the probable cost, but a report was not made because the next year court holding in New Gloucester was abolished.
To be continued.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The oldest active fireman in the State is probably Albert Call of Farmington, aged 89, who has belonged to the local company for more than a quarter of a century and who is a hydrant man. He is a Civil War veteran of the 10th Maine and prominent in Grand Army circles. He was transferred during a part of the war to the navy and was in the battle of Mobile Bay. He was a riverman for 40 years. He has helped to put out many fires and expects to run with the machine for some time yet.

W. T. Gophtill of Topsham had success with every crop on his farm.
His hay crop was 20 tons larger than last year, giving him a total of about 65 tons. Six acres of barley with a yield of 150 bushels, and eight acres of buckwheat added to the hay completely filled his big barn. Mr. Gophtill's potato crop amounted to 3700 bushels, and of that crop he harvested nearly a thousand bushels from three acres planted June 26. An eight acre field produced a little over 200 bushels to the acre. His squash, three and a half acres was five weeks in coming up, and early in the season made little promise, but the harvest amounted to 40 two-horse loads. Mr. Gophtill also has a carload of cabbages. This one farm illustrated generally the success of the year's crops.

When the hotel at Harmony was burned last winter, the sign "Elm House" was left hanging on a large elm tree and has remained there ever since. One day last week, a stranger from Nova Scotia nearly paralyzed one of the storekeepers by going in and inquiring how far up that tree anyone had to climb to before he came to the hotel.

The first electric lighting plant in Waterford has just been installed by W. K. Hamlin, for the lighting of his new house, stable, carding mill and grain store.

It cost Charles Messer $25, or $3 each for 10 partridge which Messer Warren Neal and Perkins found in his possession at Bangor on charge of being transported concealed. Messer is a Maine Central brakeman, with a pass through the game regions to Bangor. The warblers were told he was bringing in birds contrary to law and told him up as he was leaving his train with a suit case containing 10 birds.
He held the two Warren Neal boys awaiting the great abundance of birds many are being smuggled in and sold in hotels and restaurants.

Capt. E. E. Hake of the United States Fish Commission has started from Portland in charge of a special labster car loaded with 3000 live lobsters which are being sent to Seattle, Wash., where his favorite shell fish will be planted in the waters of the Pacific Ocean. Half of the lobsters are male and half female. The distance which they will travel by railroad is about 3000 miles and they are assigned to a special refrigerated car, which is attached to this through train.
